POSITIVE COMMENTS List - Carden Hall From superior papers: Dear Student, You have a clever argument. Importantly, you build in very plausible objections to your claims and then seek to respond to those objections.
 Your three points of criticism build very well on each other, and you end with a satisfying resolution.

 purposes: to show students that you attentively read the paper and to help students understand the connection between the paper and your final comments. If you tell a student in the final comment that he or she needs more analysis, for example, the student should be able to locate one or more specific sites in the text that you think are lacking.

Student response is generally poor quality so you give the feedback: "This is not your best work, but it could be improved by..."

Our thoughts: This is a strong example because the focus is on improvement rather than errors, and the phrasing also implies that you believe the student is capable of doing better.

For example: "Your argument is strong, clearly stated, and supported by ample evidence.". Or: "Your argument needs further refinement. As of now, it is more of an observation or statement of fact than a debatable argument.". Or: "You're on the right track, but try narrowing down the scope of your argument.".

Similarly, when making comments about needs, say things like, "This paper needs a clear central idea," rather than "You need a clear central idea here." Phrases like, "an area to work on," "a major problem to look at," "fragments need to be focused on and corrected," and so forth are better than what might seem to the student like direct attacks.
