Can science explain everything, including the fact of religious belief itself? Can it go so far as to disprove the existence of God? One response is to say that science and Christianity just deal with different questions and are complementary. Yet if this is God's world, a scientific search for truth about it must be of religious significance.

Do Science and Christianity Conflict?

The science vs Christian conflict is over. In an increasingly global and secular scientific culture, the cutting edge of Christian engagement is the conversation with science. In fact, the progress or decline of Christian faith in the 21st century depends largely on its dialogue with science. For Christians, the current cultural skirmishes might seem to be about the best expressions of human sexuality, freedom of speech, or the rights of Christian schools to hire and fire.

One way to erase the conflicts between science and Christianity is to view them as entirely separate endeavors, with different purposes, methods, and bodies of knowledge. This view emphasizes that science is a system of knowledge about the world and its behavior, whereas religion is about morality, God, and the afterlife. Thus, Christianity and science cannot conflict, because they are addressing different sorts of questions. 3
