Welcome to Temptation Simon

We all hope that we
will be cared for
as we age. But the details of that

care, for caretaker and recipient alike, raise some of life's most vexing questions. From the mid-nineteenth to the mid-twentieth century, as an explosive economy and shifting social opportunities drew the young away from home, the elderly used promises of inheritance to keep children at their side. Hendrik Hartog tells the riveting, heartbreaking stories of how families fought over the work of care and its compensation. Someday All This Will Be Yours narrates the legal and emotional strategies mobilized by older people, and explores the ambivalences of family members as they struggled with expectations of love and duty. Court cases offer an extraordinary glimpse of the mundane, painful, and intimate predicaments of family life. They reveal what it meant to be old without the pensions, Social Security, and nursing homes that now do much of the work of serving the elderly. From demented grandparents to fickle fathers, from litigious sons to grateful daughters, Hartog guides us into a world of disputed promises and broken hearts, and helps us feel the terrible tangle of love and commitments and money. From one of the bedrocks of the human condition—the tension between the infirmities of the elderly and the longings of the young—emerges a pioneering work of exploration into the darker recesses of family life. Ultimately, Hartog forces us to reflect on what we owe and are owed as members of a family.

Finding Perfect
Ember
A Best Book of 2021 by Bloomberg BusinessWeek, Time, and The Washington Post
The bestselling author of Leonardo da Vinci and Steve Jobs returns with a "compelling" (The Washington Post) account of how Nobel Prize winner Jennifer Doudna and her colleagues launched a revolution that will allow us to cure diseases, fend off viruses, and have healthier babies. When Jennifer Doudna was in sixth grade, she came home one day to find that her dad had left a paperback titled The Double Helix on her bed. She put it aside, thinking it was one of those detective tales she loved. When she read it on a rainy Saturday, she discovered she was right, in a way. As she sped through the pages, she became enthralled by the intense drama behind the competition to discover the code of life. Even though her high school counselor told her girls didn't become scientists, she decided she would. Driven by a passion to understand how nature works and to turn discoveries into inventions, she would help to make what the book's author, James Watson, told her was the most important biological advance since his codiscovery of the structure of DNA. She and her collaborators turned a curiosity of nature into an invention that will transform the human race: an easy-to-use tool that can edit DNA. Known as CRISPR, it opened a brave new world of medical miracles and moral questions. The development of CRISPR and the race to create vaccines for coronavirus will hasten our transition to the next great innovation revolution. The past half-century has been a digital age, based on the microchip, computer, and internet. Now we are entering a life-science revolution. Children who study digital coding will be joined by those who study genetic code. Should we use our new evolution-hacking powers to make us less susceptible to viruses? What a wonderful boon that would be! And what about preventing depression? Hmmm...Should we allow parents, if they can afford it, to enhance the height or muscles or IQ of their kids? After helping to discover CRISPR, Doudna became a leader in wrestling with these moral issues and, with her collaborator Emmanuelle Charpentier, won the Nobel Prize in 2020. Her story is an "enthraling detective story" (Oprah Daily) that involves the most profound wonders of nature, from the origins of life to the future of our species.

At the age of thirty-
six, on the verge of
completing a decade's
worth of training as a neurosurgeon, Paul Kalanithi was diagnosed with stage
IV lung cancer. One
day he was a doctor
treating the dying,
and the next he was a
patient struggling to live. And just like that, the future he
and his wife had
imagined evaporated.
When *Breath Becomes
Air* chronicles
Kalanithi's
transformation from a
naïve medical student
"possessed," as he
wrote, "by the
question of what,
given that all
organisms die, makes
a virtuous and
meaningful life" into a neurosurgeon at Stanford working in the brain, the most critical place for
human identity, and
finally into a
patient and new
father confronting
his own mortality.
What makes life worth
living in the face of death? What do you do
when the future, no
longer a ladder
toward your goals in life, flattens out
into a perpetual

present? What does it
mean to have a child,
to nurture a new life
as another fades
away? These are some of the questions
Kalanithi wrestles
with in this
profoundly moving,
exquisitely observed
memoir. Paul Kalanithi died in March 2015, while
working on this book,
yet his words live on
as a guide and a gift
to us all. "I began to realize that
coming face to face
with my own
mortality, in a
sense, had changed
nothing and
everything," he wrote. "Seven words
from Samuel Beckett
began to repeat in my head: 'I can't go on.
I'll go on.'" When Breath Becomes Air is
an unforgettable,
life-affirming
reflection on the
challenge of facing
death and on the relationship between
doctor and patient,
from a brilliant
writer who became

Author and consultant Jennifer Garvey Berger has worked with all types of leaders—from top executives at Google to nonprofit directors who are trying to make a dent in social change. She hears a version of the same plea from every client in nearly every sector around the world: "I know that complexity and uncertainty are testing my instincts, but I don't know which to trust. Is there some way to know what to do when I can't know what's next?" Her newest work is an answer to this plea. Using her background in adult development, complexity theories, and leadership consultancy, Garvey Berger discerns five pernicious and pervasive "mind traps" to frame the book. These are: the desire for simple stories, our sense that we are right, our desire to get along with others in our group, our fixation with control, and our constant quest to protect and defend our egos. In addition to understanding why these natural impulses steer us wrong in a fast-moving world, leaders will get powerful questions and approaches that help them escape these patterns. Searching for Beautiful Simon and Schuster From "one of the
