Another good rule for beginners to advanced snowboarders looking for a versatile snowboard is that your snowboard should be about 20-23cm shorter than your height. However, if you are a very good snowboarder then we would recommend you to opt for a slightly larger snowboard, as it will give you a little more power in your carves, more stability at high speeds and more float in softer snow.

Sizing Guide for Snowboard Bindings

If you're a beginner you should err towards shorter boards, as they're easier to guide. If you're more experienced and want to go faster, find a longer board. Look at your feet: Not whilst you're actually snowboarding, though! If you have feet over size 11, you may want to consider getting a wider board.

Myth Buster: Snowboard Sizing [Guide]

Boot Size. More than a snowboard's length, you need to consider the waist width. Your boot size designates your binding size, and the relationship between your binding and board determines edge-to-edge control and toe drag.

SNOWBOARD SIZE. SNOWBOARD WIDTH. length: cm. Board Waist Width: 225-235 mm. What we suggest: If you want more stability you can pick something even longer. If you want more flexible you can pick something shorter. For free style riders we are recommending a shorter board so it's more flexible, if you are more into flat tricks, you may want to pick a even shorter one. (about 3-5 cm less than an all mountain board.
