Excerpt from Manual of the Botany of the Region of San Francisco Bay: Being a Systematic Arrangement of the Higher Plants Growing Spontaneously in the Counties of Marin, Sonoma, Napa, Solano, Contra Costa, Alameda, Santa Clara, San Mateo and San Francisco, in the State of California This volume has been prepared with reference to the needs of those who, whether as studying in our high schools, academies and colleges, or as private students and amateurs, desire to make some beginnings in the systematic botany of middle western California. In order that the volume should be small, it was necessary that the scope of it should be limited. So exceedingly varied is the ora of even limited areas in our State, that not even all the owerling plants of the counties touching San Francisco Bay could be brie y but sufficiently classified and described within the limit of three hundred and fifty octavo pages. We have therefore been obliged to conclude this Flora for beginners at the end of the ninetieth of our natural orders of owerling plants. These ninety embrace, however, all in our district which the novice in plant determination would be likely to take up, and a number of genera and Species much greater than the beginner may master in one season's study, or in three. Thus no complaint will arise that the sedges and grasses, the pondweeds and the ferns have been omitted from this brief and more or less tentative treatise. In Instructions for an Animal Body, Kelly Gray leads readers on a journey where body is both the death ground of grief and the birthplace of resilience. Using natural history to flip human constructs around predator and prey, violence and sensuality, Gray reimagines a lush modern mythology. From the work of vultures to weather systems between legs, these poems will transport you into a gritty world where boundaries between beasts and humans merge and the beautiful monster-within reigns supreme.
