Sphere (Literature) - TV Tropes

From explaining living under 30 pressures, to unveiling the purpose of the strange sphere found inside the ship void of any signs of life except for one mummified crew member, Crichton creates a story that's hard to put down, while educating his readers on deeps sea life--black holes--the mysteries of the human imagination--along with a study of the shadow part of our minds, our unconscious.

On the surface, Sphere — a 1998 flop directed by Barry Levinson and adapted from Michael Crichton's hit sci-fi thriller — is perfect for lockdown: Four scientists, trapped in a bubble thousands of feet below the ocean's surface, slowly go mad. It's an old favorite of mine, though it's not at all a classic, and I'm sure only about five people even remember it exists.

The Sphere (1987) is Michael Crichton's metaphor for his own mind. The novel preceded Travels (1989); Crichton's autobiographical work that attempted to explain himself and his beliefs. The plot of Sphere, the characters, the style, the action, the setting, the monsters, the technology, the science are all mostly irrelevant.

Book Overview Crichton keeps us guessing at every turn in his best work since The Andromeda Strain. Los Angeles Times In the middle of the South Pacific, a thousand feet below the surface of the water, a huge vessel is discovered resting on the ocean floor. It is a spaceship of phenomenal dimensions, apparently undamaged by its fall from the sky.

Sphere by Michael Crichton, First Edition - AbeBooks

In Sphere, Crichton's writing is dense with concrete technical information. For example, he describes a boat "laying a new fiber-optics cable" with a "carrying capacity of twenty thousand simultaneous telephonic transmissions," and a "nuclear submarine with SY-2 misses."
