In the Sway by Kat Spears, Jesse is a drug distributor, I observed. The book never exclusively point out this, but we know he supplies drugs to the school students. And we all know the drug supplier has good influence power in schools. He does the freelance job as a low-level hitman or something similar.

Advice to Kat Spears: dump the Prologue. The book is so good, the story so riveting, the prologue isn't needed.

This is the story of a few months in the life of a teenage boy whose emotions are almost completely locked down due to a mentally ill mother who committed suicide and a mostly absent father.
