The untold story of the root cause of America's education crisis--and the seemingly endless cycle of multigenerational poverty. It was only after years within the education reform movement that Natalie Wexler stumbled across a hidden explanation for our country's frustrating lack of progress when it comes to providing every child with a quality education. The problem wasn't one of the usual scapegoats: lazy teachers, shoddy facilities, lack of accountability. It was something no one was talking about: the elementary school curriculum's intense focus on decontextualized reading comprehension "skills" at the expense of actual knowledge. In the tradition of Dale Russakoff's The Prize and Dana Goldstein's The Teacher Wars, Wexler brings together history, research, and compelling characters to pull back the curtain on this fundamental flaw in our education system--one that fellow reformers, journalists, and policymakers have long overlooked, and of which the general public, including many parents, remains unaware. But The Knowledge Gap isn't just a story of what schools have gotten so wrong--it also follows innovative educators who are in the process of shedding their deeply ingrained habits, and describes the rewards that have come along: students who are not only excited to learn but are also acquiring the knowledge and vocabulary that will enable them to succeed. If we truly want to fix our education system and unlock the potential of our neediest children, we have no choice but to pay attention. Routledge

This book is a celebration and an acknowledgement of the various forms of intellectual, physical, emotional and passionate endeavours in which teachers at their best engage. Christopher Day demonstrates that teachers with a passion for teaching are those who are committed, enthusiastic and intellectually and emotionally energetic in their work with children, young people and adults alike. Having this passion for helping pupils to learn has recently been identified as one of the four leadership characteristics mentioned in the HayMcBer Report on effective teachers. Day recognises that passionate teachers are aware of the challenge of the broader social contexts in which they teach, have a clear sense of identity and believe they can make a difference to the learning and achievement of all their pupils. Offering a refreshing and positive view, A Passion for Teaching is a contribution to understanding and improving the teaching profession and brings new insights to the work and lives of teachers. It is written for all teachers, teacher educators and student teachers who have a passion for education, who love learners, the learning life and the teaching life.

The New Rules of Work How2Become Ltd

If we are to accept the premise that good teachers do in fact make a difference to students in the classroom, then we must make every effort to place the best teachers in those positions. The challenge for school hiring agents is how to determine who are the best teachers, and how they will select the best from the large pool of teaching applicants available. This study was designed to determine to what extent the questions asked during the new teacher interview align with the qualities of effective teaching utilizing two frameworks: the Revised New York State Annual Professional Performance Review standards (2010) and Charlotte Danielson's Framework for Effective Teaching (2009). This study will also examine the differences, and correlations, between the numbers of questions that were asked by participant and school demographic groups which aligned to qualities of effective teaching. A second part of this research was to determine if the assessment tool used to rank new teacher candidates aligned with the qualities of effective teaching using the same frameworks. This mixed methods study involved requesting source documents from 20 participants of interview questions provided by school hiring agents, along with the measuring tool used to assess the answers. The respondents were primarily principals. 17 participants provided interview questions, only two provided rating tools. One was a 1-4 Likert scale placed next to each question and the other was a rating sheet that did not rate the answers to questions, but instead other unrelated characteristics. In addition to the source document review, a brief interview was held with each participant that was used to inform the study. The questions asked during the interview were coded, sorted, and tabulated by the number of times a question was asked in each category of effective teaching. The data was then sorted by participant and school demographics to reveal patterns or differences in the qualities addressed within the questions. A compendium of questions was created, containing lists of questions that align with each quality of effective teaching. All participants who submitted questions asked questions related to New York State Standards 2: Knowledge of content and instructional planning and 7: Professional growth, and Danielson's Domains 1: Planning and preparation and 4: Professional responsibilities. Participants addressed other qualities off effectiveness to varying degrees. There existed many differences and correlations to the extent in which attributes of effective teaching were addressed. While all participants addressed the areas of instruction, lesson planning and preparation, and professional responsibilities, the extent to which desired qualities of effective teaching are addressed during new teacher interviews is contextual. In the sample studied, factors such as school type, student population, and principal background effect the extent to which different aspects of effective teaching were addressed. While the participant's reported themselves as responsible for the questions asked during the interview, they were often not the authors of the questions. Every participant spoke of a committee process, which included colleagues and school community members. The interview is one of the most frequently used tools in teacher hiring, yet the level of its effectiveness remains in question. This study hopes to contribute to the field of school human resources and teacher hiring by leading school hiring agents to be more thoughtful about the interview questions they asked during the new teacher hiring process, and to how they measure the answers. It will also raise awareness for the need to create policies and procedures that enhance the hiring process.

"Teaching Autoethnography: Personal Writing in the Classroom is dedicated to the practice of immersive ethnographic and autoethnographic writing that encourages authors to participate in the communities about which they write. This book draws not only on critical qualitative inquiry methods such as interview and observation, but also on theories and sensibilities from creative writing and performance studies, which encourage self-reflection and narrative composition. Concepts from qualitative inquiry studies, which examine everyday life, are combined with approaches to the creation of character and scene to help writers develop engaging narratives that examine chosen subcultures and the author's position in relation to her research subjects. The book brings together a brief history of first-person qualitative research and writing from the past forty years, examining the evolution of nonfiction and qualitative approaches in relation to the personal essay. A selection of recent student writing in the genre as well as reflective student essays on the experience of conducting research in the classroom is presented in the context of exercises for coursework and beyond. Also explored in detail are guidelines for interviewing and identifying subjects and techniques for creating informed sketches and images that engage the reader. This book provides approaches anyone can use to explore their communities and write about them first-hand. The methods presented can be used for a single assignment in a larger course or to guide an entire semester through many levels and varieties of informed personal writing."--Open Textbook Library.

Children in today's world are inundated with information about who to be, what to do and how to live. But what if there was a way to teach children how to manage priorities, focus on goals and be a positive influence on the world around them? The Leader in Meis that programme. It's based on a hugely successful initiative carried out at the A.B. Combs Elementary School in North Carolina. To hear the parents of A. B Combs talk about the school is to be amazed. In 1999, the school debuted a programme that taught The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People to a pilot group of students. The parents reported an incredible change in their children, who blossomed under the programme. By the end of the following year the average end-of-grade scores had leapt from 84 to 94. This book will launch the message onto a much larger platform. Stephen R. Covey takes the 7 Habits, that have already changed the lives of millions of people, and shows how children can use them as they develop. Those habits -- be proactive, begin with the end in mind, put first things first, think win-win, seek to understand and then to be understood, synergize, and sharpen the saw -- are critical skills to learn at a young age and bring incredible results, proving that it's never too early to teach someone how to live well.
