The characters have no personality, the plot has no coherence and the 'Cairo Diary' isn't even a diary, being written in the third person instead of the first. If, as the blurb claims, Chattam is 'one of the best contemporary thriller authors', God help the Frogs... 5.0 out of 5 stars Five Stars 20 March 2017

Praise for "The Cairo Diary" "Maxim Chattam's "The Cairo Diary" gives us memorable portraits of both contemporary, storm-tossed Mont-Saint-Michel and sepia-toned 1920s Cairo in a marvelously atmospheric thriller.

The diary details Jeremy and Azim ' s hunt for the killer, whom Jeremy, far from an unbiased observer, suspects may be the wealthy man now married to Jeremy ' s former lover. Obsessed with the dairy and even a little in love with the charismatic Jeremy, Marion soon confirms that the dairy describes actual murders.

The Cairo Diary is an atmospheric thriller that does, I feel, edge towards the realms of gothic horror. We are presented with Marion who, after uncovering something within her real life, is sent to hide away under the guise of seeking a 'retreat' amongst a religious order.
