The Doll: The Lost Short Stories by Daphne du Maurier
The lost stories of Daphne du Maurier, collected in one volume for the first time. Before she wrote Rebecca, the novel that would cement her reputation as a twentieth-century literary giant, a young Daphne du Maurier penned short fiction in which she explored the images, themes, and concerns that informed her later work. Originally published in periodicals during the early 1930s, many of these stories never found their way into print again . . . until now.

Now The Doll: The Lost Short Stories provides a glimpse of that vision in the making. This slim volume contains eight stories that were originally published in the U.K. volume Early Stories and five that first appeared in periodicals during the 1930s. With the exception of "The Limpet" (1959), all were written before du Maurier had reached the age of twenty-three, and they are, for the most part, experiments in gothic horror, Victorian melodrama, farce, fantasy, and interior monologue.

The Doll Lost Short Stories

There's some great writing in some of these, particularly THE LIMPET, but her stories grew colder the deeper I went into the collection. EAST WIND had some great moody commentary on insularity and colonialism with some creepy atmosphere reminiscent of Innsmouth. THE DOLL was flat out weird and dark, with an awesomely wretched unreliable narrator.
