Many beginners tend to place the ball exactly in the middle. You need to set the ball more forward in your stance, since the driver is a long club, to allow the driver to square up with it. This also means that the driver will hit the ball on the upswing, which creates less spin and straighter drives.

The Complete Guide to Maximizing Driver Distance
The main technique remains the same, but with the driver your body is positioned slightly different than when hitting an iron or wedge. During the swing, your arms remain still (same as iron) as you come through to hit the ball. The most common mishits come from an individual swinging the driver like they are trying to hit the ball 3 miles.
