Strategic bombing during World War II - Wikipedia

Firebombing is a bombing technique designed to damage a target, generally an urban area, through the use of fire, caused by incendiary devices, rather than from the blast effect of large bombs.. In popular usage, any act in which an incendiary device is used to initiate a fire is often described as a “firebombing”. This article is concerned with aerial incendiary bombing as a military tactic ...

Jörg Friedrich (sometimes spelled Joerg or Jorg in English) (born 17 August 1944 in Kitzbühel) is a German author and historian. Friedrich is best known for his publication Der Brand (2002), in which he portrays the Allied bombing of civilian targets during World War II as systematic and in many ways pointless mass murder. An English translation, The Fire, was published in 2006 by Columbia ...

The bombing of Dresden was a historic benchmark that demonstrated the power of strategic bombing. Critics say that the military value of the bombing did not justify Dresden’s near destruction and that the city could have been spared, like Rome, Paris, and Kyoto. Given the high number of civilian casualties and the relatively few strategic targets, some even called the bombing of Dresden a war ...
