The British media recently observed the fiftieth anniversary of The Golden Notebook by treating it as a novel primarily for women. A BBC interviewer asked Lessing where her images came from, whether men had mistreated her, and why she decided to write about menstruation. "It never crossed my mind not to write about menstruation," she responded.

The Golden Notebook is a 1962 novel by Doris Lessing.

It, like the two books that followed it, enters the realm of what Margaret Drabble in The Oxford Companion to English Literature called Lessing's
"inner space fiction"; her work that explores mental and societal breakdown.
