How Harvard Business School Has Reshaped American ...

The Harvard Business School’s founding presumption was the concept of teaching business management as a professional practice with a scientific basis. The first dean, Edwin Gay, wanted the school to develop a “science of business.” Gay recruited Frederick Taylor, the “father of scientific management,” as an HBS lecturer in 1908.

“A massively detailed history of Harvard Business School since its founding in 1908 and a searing critique of the school’s impact on American capitalism....McDonald’s deep research into the 100-plus years of HBS—the faculty members, the courses offered, many of the students—is undoubtedly impressive.” --Kirkus Reviews
