In Diskin's debut mystery-thriller, a Chicago lawyer discovers a dead body and becomes entangled in a dangerous conspiracy. After a series of mishaps, lawyer Abby Donovan, an overworked associate trying to make partner, finds herself in a seedy bar on the wrong side of town—and she discovers a prostitute's corpse in the bar's bathroom.

The Green Line is actually in a completely different genre (legal/criminal), but is inspiring in that Diskin not only knows her stuff (she has a history practicing law), but is clearly impassioned about the issue of illegal police seizures of property.

As a Chicagoan I felt that Diskin got most of the details right.
My one criticism has
to do with the way
that personal lives

were wrapped up to neatly in the end. It felt like a concession to the
tropes of romance
novels. review 2: I am surprised how much
I enjoyed The Green Line.

The Green Line. When E.C. Diskin published her debut legal thriller novel, The Green Line, under her own imprint in the spring of 2013, her aim of reaching a thousand readers felt impossible. After spending a year with an agent who couldn't make a deal with one of the well-known publishers, she decided it was time to take matters in her own hands.

E.C. Diskin received a B.S. from Texas Christian University and a law degree from DePaul University College of Law in Chicago. After several years in practice and a drawer full of story ideas, Diskin joined a writers group and began work on what became The Green Line.

Diskin is now focused on a sequel and the completion of other works in progress.
