Central protagonist Finus Bates is the octogenarian editor of his hometown newspaper, The Mercury Comet, and sometime radio personality—and, through the long years of an unhappy marriage and unmitigated grief over his only son ' s early death, the unfulfilled lover of Birdie Wells Urquhart, whom Finus has adored ever since he accidentally saw her naked many decades earlier. Watson sets their unaccomplished relationship within a roiling context that embraces such melodramatic local ...

Brad Watson's The Heaven of Mercury is simply a gorgeous undertaking beautifully executed. The story can't be shoe-horned into a style type though his writing is certainly southern, with atmospherics on a par with any of the other great southern writers.
