These are some of the concluding words that Ferenc Máté writes in his memoir The Hills of Tuscany: A New Life in an Old Land (1998). They "One by one we emptied the bottles of wine in our tiny cantina, and little by little we learned about Tuscany—its hills, its light, its food and wine, and most importantly its simple, passionate, in-love-with-life people.

Ferenc Máté (Author of The Hills of Tuscany)

More than an enthusiastic tribute to the ever astounding beauties of the Italian countryside, "The Hills Of Tuscany" is a paean to the pleasures of the palate as Mate describes in rapturous detail ravioli stuffed with ricotta and wild mushrooms, crostini spread with tuna and capers, rabbit ragu "spicy with tomatoes" plus a legion of dishes bathed, basted, stir-fried, swathed in or caressed by olive oil.
