As the story begins Rabbit Hayes is being driven to a hospice by her mother and we follow her last nine days of life there. It is an incredibly emotional book: not only are you feeling for the characters but I think it's a book where you can't help but think about your own experiences, either in losing a relative or friend or imagining how it would feel if you were in the characters' shoes.

Rabbit had travelled in her nightwear and dressing-gown even though she'd originally planned to wear day clothes. Molly had brought an expensive pair of wide-legged jersey trousers and a cotton V-necked jumper from Rabbit's house to the hospital, but by the time she'd seen the consultant, received her meds from the pharmacy and been formally discharged, Rabbit had been too tired to change.
