The real-life orchestra from which Goldman's memoir takes its name, the New York Late-Starters String Orchestra

(www.nyiso.org) is an intergenerational ensemble founded in 2007 by and for amateurs. Its membership includes players who gave up their instruments decades ago when "life" got in the way, those who always yearned to play but deferred their dreams until middle age or later, or those who accidentally discovered a passion for making music rather than simply consuming it.

Ari Goldman hasn't played in twenty-five years, but he's decided to give the cello one last chance.

First he secures a seat in his eleven-year-old son's youth orchestra, and then he's ready for the big time: the Late Starters Orchestra of New York City

- a bona fide amateur string orchestra for beginning or recently returning adult players.
