"The Light at the End" is vampire horror at it's best. This novel is slick and sophisticated, written for an audience that is no longer satisfied with being spoon fed the same old plot.

Fortunately, this novel has been re-released only recently in hardcover by a new press Stealth Press. (www.stealthpress.com). Finally this classic is again in print.

John Muir's death certificate lists his occupation as geologist, but he died true to form as a writer, surrounded in his bed by manuscript pages of his book, Travels in Alaska. The pages on which he was working this very day, I like to think, were his last words in that book, in which he described his sense of being in paradise, aurora borealis, the Northern Lights.
