The Magician is a novel by British author W. Somerset Maugham, originally published in 1908. In this tale, the magician Oliver Haddo, a caricature of Aleister Crowley, attempts to create life. Crowley wrote a critique of this book under the pen name Oliver Haddo, in which he accused Maugham of plagiarism.

The Magician (Penguin Classics): Maugham, W. Somerset ...

W. Somerset Maugham's 1908 novel "The Magician" is, as Robert Calder's introductory essay frankly admits, derivative of the then-current public fascination with the occult. Maugham was between best-sellers and writing for income; the result is formulaic, but still an example of the author's ability to tell a good story.

THE MAGICIAN is one of Somerset Maugham's early works. It was inspired by Aleister Crowley, and demonstrates that Maugham was well acquainted with Crowley's ideas concerning black magic. It is not great literature, and quite different than anything else that I've read by Maugham; but it is a well-written, intellectual horror story.

The first half of this book really succeeds in building up tension, but I could barely stand reading it to the end. After a while Somersets prose gets incredibly repetitive and awkward, not to mention the apocalyptic heaps of adjectives - although the figure of Haddo is in fact a fascinating one.
