Here, he tells of the lives of his neighbors and of the successive owners of a ranch consisting in the main of a 360-acre hay meadow. Galvin's annals are comprised of one hundred very brief vignettes, remarkable for their sympathetic portrayals of these men and women and their Antaeus-like symbiosis with the beautiful but unforgiving land.

The Meadow takes us right through this century and leaves us on the cusp of the present, yet the lives Galvin depicts with such compassion and humor are not in the least interior or contemporary. In Galvin's world, hard physical work and omnipotent weather tend to dwarf the man sitting inside his house, looking out at the world.

The Meadow. These ragged sketches of ranch life along the Wyoming-Colorado border depict Galvin's neighbors--hardscrabble folk--in wry, stoic stories of skill, survival and loss that flash back and forth across 100 years of the high meadow's history. The author's ( Imaginary Timber ) style of lyrical reserve is sufficient to preserve Lyle, Ray,...

Overdue Books: The Meadow, by James Galvin (Henry Holt, 1992)

The Meadow is an extraordinary book. James Galvin is a poet and this part novel / part biography reads almost like an epic poem with each chapter as a new verse. Weaving back and forth in time and from character to character, the meadow of the title remains at the core of these people's lives.
