This book, "The Mind's Eye", by Oliver Sacks, is fascinating, absorbing, and vastly entertaining. Like most of his other books, it is the true story of his personal experiences; this time, with his sight, along with his neurological analysis of what was happening in his eye and in his brain.

In The Mind's Eye, Oliver Sacks explores some of the most fundamental facets of human experience: how we see in three dimensions, how we represent the world internally when our eyes are closed, and the remarkable, unpredictable ways that our brains find new ways of perceiving that create worlds as complete and rich as the no-

The Mind's Eye is a 2010 book by neurologist Oliver Sacks. The book contains case studies of people whose ability to navigate the world visually and communicate with others have been compromised, including the author's own experience with cancer of the eye and his lifelong inability to recognise faces.
