After years of complaint, a new Poor Law was introduced in 1834. The new Poor Law was meant to reduce the cost of looking after the poor and impose a system which would be the same all over the country. Under the new Poor Law, parishes were grouped into unions and each union had to build a workhouse if they did not already have one.

The Poor Law Report of 1834 . Parliamentary commissions in 1817 and 1824 had criticized the old system but offered no alternatives. In 1834 this changed with the creation of the Royal Commission of Edwin Chadwick and Nassau Senior, men who wanted to reform the poor law on a utilitarian basis.

Critical of amateur organization and desirous for greater uniformity, they aimed for the ‘ greatest happiness for the greatest number. ’

Plenty more poor people were prosecuted without lawyers in the early 20th century. The Supreme Court even backpedaled in 1942, deciding that only the illiterate needed to be appointed lawyers. It wasn't until 1963 that the foundation for the current system — whereby “ if you cannot afford a lawyer, one will be appointed for you ” — was laid.

The Poor Had No Lawyers – Peter Bevis & Highland Titles

The new law provided no relief for the able-bodied poor except employment in the workhouse, with the object of stimulating workers to seek regular employment rather than charity. The growth of humanitarian feeling in the 19th century helped to mitigate the harshness of the law in practice, and the phenomenon of industrial unemployment in the 20th century showed that poverty was more than a moral problem.
