There is an endless string of characters, German and Irish, who march through the book, relatives with funny German names and funny Irish names. One of the more enigmatic of the book's people is the child's father who keeps bees
- "he was dressed for going to the moon with a cage around his head"
- and tries to invent things.

The Speckled People A Memoir

"...Dead people have the best conversations of all. Lots of people don't really speak until they're dead, because only then can they say all the things to each other in the graveyard that they have been keeping a secret all their lives." ? The Speckled People (Paperback) - Walmart.com

"The Speckled Poeple" is Hugo Hamilton's childhood memoir. Half-German, half-Irish, he and his siblings grow up in 1950's Dublin. His father, an ardent nationalist, forbids the usage of English in his house and this together with his German mother is enough to make the Hamilton family the "the strange others" in the neighbourhood. The Speckled People: A Memoir of a Half-Irish Childhood by ...
