It should be a simple matter for an ex-cop, retired FBI agent, and successful security specialist to come up with an efficient method of punching his own ticket. Yet, a year after Jared McCormick made his grim decision, here he is – still battling his debilitating demons and enduring his multiplying phobias. He's gotten quite good at ducking the net that should have been thrown over him by now, but this is a bad thing. After all, he is well trained, very experienced, and assuredly deadly – and on the verge of going postal... a very bad thing. He's so adept at survival that he will somehow have to trick himself into safely dying. So, the current suicide plan he can live with, so to speak, centers on returning to the small town that had spawned, tormented, and shunned him as a boy. Since he's going to die anyway - one way or another - he means to go out in a blaze of heroism by manipulating some small time, small town crime to his favor. The town, by God, will finally remember him with respect...

however, the plan didn't include babysitting an exhausted chief of police, or dodging a past that keeps slapping him in the face, or falling for a little girl's dimpled smile. And it certainly didn't call for him to be pitted against a serial killer - a sick and haunted superhero - arrogant, cynical, and failing fast versus a desperate man terrorizing the town – do either of them have a future? All events and characters depicted in this book are fictional.

Eleanor Milligan, born in downtown Boston, knows only poverty and a continuing battle against bullying brothers and a sadistic father. And when Eleanor's Cousin Rose asks not only Eleanor but also Artemis to stay on at Strand House, County Cork, it marks the start of what is for both of them an idyllic time. But with the arrival of the devastatingly handsome artist, Hugo Tanner, it seems as though nothing will be quite the same. For in the sunlit pre-war summer, all three become emotionally entwined, with startling consequences that threaten to haunt them for the rest of their

Jane Everly thrives in the tranquil embrace of her coastal North Carolina hometown. As the proud owner of a charming pet store, she has woven herself into the vibrant tapestry of the community. Her routine is a symphony of beachside walks, sunrises from her porch, and the comforting presence of her furry friends. Having experienced the profound loss of her spouse at an early age, Jane has embraced contentment, grateful for the love she once found. On the flip side of fate, Hayden Moore's life is a whirlwind on wheels. Maneuvering an eighteen-wheeler across the map, he's accustomed to a nomadic existence, with only his dog and his truck for companionship. Deep-rooted connections are a luxury he can't afford, not when every mile is a paycheck, and every pit stop is a chance to rest his tired eyes. But fate, as it often does, weaves the unexpected. When Jane and Hayden's worlds collide at the crossroads of a small coastal town, their defenses are tested. Jane's close-knit community envelops Hayden, revealing the beauty of human bonds he's never known. As their paths intertwine during a sun-soaked summer, Hayden's focus on work begins to waver as his heart softens. Amid the backdrop of salty breezes and sandy shores, Jane's unwavering faith casts a gentle light on Hayden's life. And Hayden's nightly calls to his ailing mother paint a poignant picture of his devotion beyond the highway's horizon. Can the magic of a beachside community and the power of unwavering faith guide two souls toward a love they never sought? In a summer of serendipity, Jane and Hayden discover that sometimes, the heart knows where the journey truly leads.
