LeCarre, long past his George Smiley glory days and formerly one of my favorite authors (read the stuff he wrote in the 60s and 70s), has been (pun) a prime example. Author Joakim Zander's writing style in The Swimmer is difficult to describe. His word choices and sentence structure pull the reader into his scenes and hold him there, turning the page, and the next, and the next. It is clear that he ponders over every word, every phrase, every sentence.
