The structure of the contemporary University is changing rapidly, and we have yet to understand what precisely these changes will mean. Is a new age dawning for the University, the renaissance of higher education under way?

The University In Ruins Bill

Bill Readings has left us a sobering diagnosis of the positions of researchers, teachers and administrators in what he calls the "post-historical" university. As his title suggests, he sees the contemporary university as a "ruined institution," arguing primarily against redemptive and nostalgic visions of the rebirth of citizenship or reason as central to the purpose of the institution.

The University in Ruins? Dominick LaCapra Just before his untimely death, Bill Readings finished writing a book that will be a center of discussion and an object of critical dialogic exchange for some time to come. The University in Ruins contains an argument that should be considered carefully by academics, administrators, and the general public.'

Bill Reading's Cormac-McCarthy-esque assessment of higher education, The University in Ruins, tries in vain to find that hundredth question. The domain of the university, ideally reserved for the kind of high-minded pondering that produces nuclear weapons and Nobel prizes, has become just another marketplace.

There has been a settlement in this area since the Bronze Age and several artefacts have been found around Osmington. However, the village is first recorded in the middle of the 10th century, when mentioned in a charter document. The church was originally built in 1170 but there have been a number of restorations and alterations up to and including the 19th century.

Tracing the roots of the modern American University in German philosophy and in the work of British thinkers such as Newman and Arnold, Bill Readings argues that historically the integrity of the modern University has been linked to the nation-state, which it has served by promoting and protecting the idea of a national culture. But now the nation-state is in decline, and national culture no longer needs to be either promoted or protected.
