Though most art prints have little to no financial value, there are a couple of notable exceptions. Look out for prints that were part of a limited edition run, meaning the artist only produced a few copies, and prints with a handwritten signature from the artist on the front or back.

Art appraisers generally say, for example, that a sculpture is worth in the $800 - $1,200 range instead of saying it's worth $1,000. 2 Know that one-of-akind artworks are difficult to price, and somewhat more subject to change. An artwork that is truly unique and doesn't have any other analogues against which to compare it is difficult to value.
