The Wailing Wind is the fifteenth crime fiction novel in the Joe Leaphorn/Jim Chee Navajo Tribal Police series by Tony Hillerman, first published in 2002. It is a New York Times best-seller. The case of a murdered man, found in a truck on a canyon wash, immediately links to a past shooting and a lost woman tied to myths of lost gold mines, so the retired Joe Leaphorn involves himself along with Bernadette Manuelito of the Navajo Tribal Police.

The Wailing Wind is a vintage Hillerman mystery one where retired investigator Leaphorn returns to piece together a puzzle that is connected an old case of his related to a swindler claiming to have maps and documents to a lost gold mine.

The Wailing Wind Navajo Mysteries

The previous "Navajo mystery," Hunting Badger, was the low point in the series for a number of reasons, including shoddy editing by Hillerman's complacent publisher, HarperCollins. I'm happy to report that The Wailing Wind is a much better book. Not one of the best in this excellent series, but a fun read that offers the novice a taste of what makes the series must haves for mystery readers and devotees of the Southwest, and advances the continuing threads that interest the committed ...
