As a writer who straddles two cultures, Thrity Umrigar takes a gimlet-eyed view of both. In The Weight of Heaven, the Case Western Reserve University professor casts her native India as "nobody's wall paper," a crowded, corrupt and incessantly striving country rather than the spiritual haven some Westerners imagine. As for her adopted home, the United States, she sees it as a quick-fix culture where "even grief comes with an expiration date."
