The Basics of Wind Energy | AWEA

What are winds? A 'wind' is simply the flow of a huge amount of air, usually from a high-pressure area to a low-pressure area. How are winds formed? Typically, this begins with the sun's radiation, which is absorbed differently on the earth's surface.

Wind is the flow of gases on a large scale. On the surface of the Earth, wind consists of the bulk movement of air. In outer space, solar wind is the movement of gases or charged particles from the Sun through space, while planetary wind is the outgassing of light chemical elements from a planet's atmosphere into space.

But we need to understand Gone With The Wind, and not just how it constructs affection for the pre-war era through its selective point of view (though that's an important lesson for any pop-culture connoisseur). It is both visionary and regressive, a work of progress that flaunts the worst parts of the past.

The wonderful, terrible Gone With The Wind

What Is Wind? Air may not seem like anything at all; in fact, we look right through it all the time, but during a windstorm, air really makes its presence known. Wind is able to lift roofs off buildings, blow down power lines and trees, and cause highway accidents as gusts push around cars and trucks.

What are winds? How

In The Wind is Not a River, Payton returns to the theme as he describes the desperation of John and Karl, the other airman who initially survives alongside John on Attu as they harvest mussels, kill ptarmigan and seabirds with well-pitched rocks, and steal coal from the Japanese in the village to stay alive.
