This "expanse of girls, expanding still," chase each other through history, disappearing in an Illinois cornfield only to reemerge on the dissection table of a Scottish artist-anatomist. But these poems are not just interested in historical narrative: they peer, too, at the past's marginalia, at its "blank pages" as well as its "scrawls and dashes." These girls search for the connection between "alive and will stay that way," between each dying star and the emptiness that can collapse everything.
