South-up map orientation - Wikipedia

These cartographers advocated for an upside down view of the world map.....and really freaked out the White House spokesperson. You see, it is ingrained in the privileged to have a “top-down” view of things. If things are higher or on top, they tend to have greater importance. And, things with less importance tend to be lower or out of sight.

The Blue Marble photograph in its original orientation South-up map orientation is the orientation of a map with south up, or at the top of the map, amounting to a 180-degree rotation of the map from the standard convention of north-up. Maps in this orientation are sometimes called upside down maps or reversed maps.

about the upside down map of the map? You create a new one the world | sacredmargins
The light-hearted side of upside down maps (aside from startling people) is that the southern of two neighboring bodies can now be viewed as the one that's "on-top". For example, in an upside-down map, Mexico now sits directly "on top" of the USA and the United States gets a chance to sit "above" Canada.
