Since the dawn of civilization, mankind has been engaged in the conception and manufacture of discrete products to serve the functional needs of local customers and the tools (technology) needed by other craftsmen. In fact, much of the progress in civilization can be attributed to progress in discrete product manufacture. The functionality of a discrete object depends on two entities: form, and material composition. For instance, the aesthetic appearance of a sculpture depends upon its form whereas its durability depends upon the material composition. An ideal manufacturing process is one that is able to automatically generate any form (freeform) in any material. However, unfortunately, most traditional manufacturing processes are severely constrained on all these counts. There are three basic ways of creating form: conservative, subtractive, and additive. In the first approach, we take a material and apply the needed forces to deform it to the required shape, without either adding or removing material, i. e. , we conserve material. Many industrial processes such as forging, casting, sheet metal forming and extrusion emulate this approach. A problem with many of these approaches is that they focus on form generation without explicitly providing any means for controlling material composition. In fact, even form is not created directly. They merely duplicate the external form embedded in external tooling such as dies and molds and the internal form embedded in cores, etc. Till recently, we have had to resort to the 'subtractive' approach to create the form of the tooling.

Central Otago is a region with extreme climatic conditions: and within the region itself climate statistics reveal differing rainfall, temperatures, and soil quality. This book gives practical advice on which trees, shrubs and perennials may be grown successfully in Central Otago and the Lakes District. The region is booming: people are moving to Central Otago in droves from all over New Zealand. And they are planting gardens with all their favourite trees and shrubs only to find, after a dry autumn and harsh winter, that many plants have died. This guide is a showcase of plants which will thrive in this most beautiful and challenging area. Ralph Markby's horticultural experience has been gained over the past 40 years. He covers essential information on climate, average temperatures, average rates of rainfall, soil variations, and includes a list of 'favourite plants' which have been grown successfully in the region. After a short introduction to garden development where the author advises on planting a lawn, growing shelter from sun and wind, pruning, irrigation, compost and more, he moves on to his lists of suitable plants. This includes a section on trees for the smaller property, and trees for larger areas, a section on conifers, deciduous trees, shrubs, perennials, ground cover, climbers, roses, rock gardens and finally, a plant sourcing guide. There is also an extensive plant index. The book is illustrated throughout in colour with stunning photos from the author's own collection.

Insecurity in the Niger Delta: Emerging Threats in Akwa Ibom, Bayelsa, Cross River, Delta, Edo and Rivers States is a European Union- funded in-depth study of the issue of insecurity in the Niger Delta, the oil producing region of Nigeria. Security in the region is usually assessed from the context of the absence of threats to the oil industry. This study goes beyond that limited view, using case studies drawn from the six states in the South-South geopolitical zone to show emerging security threats in the region and the complex network of factors behind them. The chapters address issues of insecurity such as youth gangs/cults, sea piracy and sea robbery, election violence, communal conflicts, land disputes, chieftaincy tussles, armed robbery, human trafficking, internal population displacement (IDPs), reintegration of ex-militants, youth unemployment, internet fraud, police brutality, environmental pollution, farmer-herder crises and influx of non-indigenes. The authors critically discuss the different strategies adopted by state governments and communities in the region to address insecurity and explain why these approaches have so far failed to resolve the problem in the region. The study recommends policy options that could improve the security situation for everyday people living and working in Nigeria's Niger Delta region. _____ Tarila Marclint

The latest Stinkwheel reprint is of The Stinkwheel Saga, Episode 2 v3, first published in 2008. The original book has been updated with new information received since the first edition was published and now contains many colour images, revised page layouts and text corrections carried out in the light of new information that became available since 2008. This second Episode covers the lost-causes of British cyclemotoring; the late arrivals (after the clip-on cyclemotor's ship had already sailed...), the small-scale imports, the under-funded, the home-made, technically over-complicated and ephemeral machines which would have stood little chance commercially, had they ever achieved volume production. Many were nevertheless very interesting and ovrthy of study. A wealth of period archive material illustrates the long-lost 1950s world of power-assisted cycling. Some large-scale, long-established motorcycle manufacturers – who should have known better – (BSA, Vincent, Tube Investments...) launched themselves into the market of clip-on cyclemotors, either far too late or with poorly-developed engine units, with a singular lack of commercial success. Read all about these heroic failures, together with some surprising successes from the proverbial two-men-in-a-shed businesses.

Using case studies from the United Kingdom, Germany, Spain, France, Australia and New Zealand contributors argue that despite different local and specific contexts, the mainstream center-left is beset by a range of common challenges. Analysis focuses on institutional and structural factors, the role of key individuals, and the atrophy of progressive ideas as interconnected reasons for the current struggles of the center-left.

In the first volume, Killingly revealed the initial manufacturing emphasis in the town's villages. Killingly Revisited illustrates how the town survived after losing most of the textile industry, as it moved South, by actively seeking diversified commercial businesses. Within these pages, the town's fascinating past is displayed as newly acquired vintage views are coupled with information recently uncovered from the Killingly Historical and Genealogical Society's newspaper archives and other reference materials. In celebration of 300 years as an incorporated Connecticut town, the society is sharing photographs of Killingly's mills, businesses, buildings, churches, schools, and cemeteries. There have been losses from devastating fires that changed the face of Main Street. New streets and roads were added as modes of transportation changed. There are also new views of citizens at work and play.
