The model I tested was at 8.9 volts, so unless Vivitar made more than one version the 3500 should work fine as a manual flash on your K100. I tested the flash on my K10 body and it fired fine and gave reasonably good exposures, but despite being the Pentax variant the flash didn't appear to be sharing any data with the camera body.

I recently picked up an old 1980's Vivitar 3500 Zoom Thyristor flash with the DM/C module (for Canon). This is an "automatic" flash with no manual power setting other than full power. The head has three manual zoom positions, and it's powered by two AA batteries.

Two years on (from November 4, 2002), I've just come across TUAN HOANG's clear, concise information about the yellow triangle on the Vivitar 3500. I, too, have bought a used 3500. I, too, was unsure what the triangle meant. Now I have the data I need, thanks to Tuan Hoang and to Martha Taylor, who raised the matter in the first place.

James, I don't know the 3500 specifically, and I don't know where to find manuals. But most of those little thyristor Vivitars are pretty simple to use. There will be a selector switch somewhere, with two colors and a position in between. There will be a scale on the back with a sliding gadget and some color indicators.

I use a Vivitar 3500 with a set of Cactus V4 wireless transmitter-receiver with no issues, Prior to that i used a set of ebay adapters and a cord. I've also modified my 3500 to get variable power. The 3500 was my first flash and we've had a lot of fun together. P 120 months ago eurodiego says:

I have had my Vivitar 3500 (DM/C) for many years and it has survived corroded batteries and rough handling and I still carry it every day. I decided to write this review after finding this flash for sale here on Amazon.com. I was thinking of adding a 2nd unit to my collection "just in case".
