1. They have the ability to super clean the house when someone calls and says that they 'll be dropping over in five minutes. They know exactly where an empty box is to quickly dump things in, which room to put it in, can vacuum and clean at once while putting their hair up, and can start the coffee.

Why do we need a specific day to tell our moms we love them?

Shouldn't we do it every single day of our lives? They're always there for us no matter what and sadly only on Mother's Day is when most people remember the good things their moms have done for them.

What Mothers Do: especially when it looks like nothing ...

This book does a beautiful job of allowing us to examine what it is mothers--especially stay-at-home mothers--do all day, and, more than that, to name and honor those things. It can be very easy to feel like you're "not getting anything done," when, in fact, you are working hard all day at arguably the most important job there is!
