Of course, like any metal detector, the White's XLT has some drawbacks. The most inconvenient of them may be the XLT's weakness against moisture. Every time it was raining, I had to cover both the control box and display with zip-lock plastic bags, otherwise the detector would malfunction or stop working completely until its control box's ...

Really, unless you are shelling out big money for a top end detector, you are not going to match the Whites XLT. A few newer detectors selling for under $400 do get better depth, but they cannot discriminate as well as the XLT, so you dig more trash with those machines. Only the top end detectors are better to be honest.
