Measles can cause pneumonia and encephalitis, which can be fatal.

Pneumonia occurs in 6 percent of measles cases and is the most common cause of death. Neurologic infection is rare, occurring in only 1 out of 1000 measles cases, but with a much higher risk of permanent harm including death.

5G technology: Is it bad for our health?

Not only is the comparison wrong, it's actually quite dangerous and echoes of that early inaccuracy can still be heard today by people who downplay the severity of COVID-19.
