Would It Kill You To Put On Some Lipstick: A Year & 100 Dates is the story of my year of dating generously. Framed around the question of might I find a nice boyfriend in 100 dates or less, I embarked upon a year-long dating quest that proved humorous and grueling, forcing me to face a past I had been trying to escape much of my adult life.

If the son of Neptune didn't kill you first, one of his fanatics would get to you next. Within a week of moving to New Rome, Annabeth'd had this rule and its various intricacies memorized. Everyone she knew – her neighbors, her boss and co-workers, friends who had moved to the city before her – had stressed the importance of the son of Neptune to her straight away.

Sometimes I think that you know too

Everything fucking kills you

The sun shines on the ashes

The children fall to the masses

And the birds will sing
