Discrimination. In mainstream politics, the Shia-Sunni divide has never been an issue in Pakistan. Shia politicians have always been fully integrated into all sections of political, professional and social life without suffering any. Extremists have increasingly targeted them with hate propaganda and terrorism, yet paradoxically Shias have.

Communities. The Shia community is characterized by the presence of various branches, such as the Twelver Shiites (Ithna Ashari), the Fourteeners, the Ismailis, and the Zaidis. Each of these branches has its own distinct beliefs and practices, and they have historically lived in different regions of the world. However, discrimination against the Shia community has been a constant concern, and this has increased in recent years due to the growing influence of extremist groups.

Sunnis and Shiites: A Blueprint for Peace

The tension between Sunnis and Shiites can be traced back to the early days of Islam, when the first caliph, Abu Bakr, disagreed with the Prophet Muhammad's successor, Umar ibn al-Khattab, on how to interpret the Quran and the Sunnah. This disagreement led to the formation of two major branches of Islam: the Sunnis, who follow the teachings of the Prophet Muhammad, and the Shiites, who believe that the leader of the Muslim community should be a descendant of the Prophet and his wife Khadija.

The Shiites in Pakistan

The Shiites in Pakistan are concentrated in the Sindh province, particularly in the parts around Karachi and Hyderabad. They are the second-largest religious group in Pakistan after Sunnis. The Shiites in Pakistan are mainly divided into two major branches: the Twelver Shiites and the Ismailis. The Twelver Shiites are the largest branch and are followed by the majority of the Shiites in Sindh. They believe in the existence of twelve imams who were the descendants of the Prophet Muhammad, with the twelfth imam said to have disappeared in the eighth century and to return at the end of times.

On the other hand, the Ismailis, also known as the Ismaili Muslims, are a branch of Shiites that has a more mystical and esoteric approach to their religion. They believe in the imams, but also in the guidance of the imam who is called the Imam-Husayn, who is considered to be the first imam of the Ismailis.

The Shia community in Pakistan has been facing various challenges, including discrimination, marginalization, and violence. However, they have also faced various opportunities to promote their religion, culture, and identity. As a result, the Shia community in Pakistan is known for its resilience and adaptability.
